IMPARTIAL, NOT NEUTRAL.

SHANGHAI, SATURDAY, AUGUST 5, 1865.

THE arbitrary manner in which rewards are granted and punishments inflicted by the Chinese government, is of itself sufficient to account for the lukewarm attachment which each native official feels towards the system under which he lives. It is hardly too much to say that the loyalty of the mandarins may be accurately measured by the disadvantages which might arise to them from a revolt. So long as the established state of things provides each high officer with the opportunity of making a colossal fortune in a few years, and throws unnumbered chances of gain in the way of his no less rapacious subordinates, a certain outward form of loyalty will no doubt be preserved. But so soon as this balance of advantage appears to incline to the side of rebellion, so soon as an eligible opportunity of personal aggrandisement presents itself, all the bonds which unite the individual to the state snap of themselves, and the trusted councillor, the successful general, or the almost Imperial viceroy casts away the chains which, however highly gilded, are yet painfully galling. The last few years have witnessed an illustration of these assertions in the pretensions set up by the Governor of Yunan, and the years now opening before us may afford another and more pointed example in the conduct of the two men who may be taken as the types of the Chinese officialdom of the present day —Tsêng Kuo-fan and Li Hung-chang. The honours which have been heaped on these men must be dear to them, the opportunities held out by their position of gratifying that rapacity which seems inseparable from a Chinese official are not to be slighted, and it is therefore to be anticipated that they, in common with all other mandarins in corresponding positions, would deeply resent the withdrawal of those titles and dignities which have been conferred by the throne in a burst of temporary enthusiasm. But while it seems perfectly safe to degrade such an one as Kwan Wên, who represents no party in the state, and possesses no resources upon which to fall back in case of his incurring the displeasure of his sovereign, the case would be far different were either Tsêng or Li cast down from the high position held by both. Tsêng, as the acknowledged head of the conservative party, enjoys unbounded influence, while Li, as possessing a formidable army and being acquainted with the best means of securing the aid of foreigners, is, physically, as formidable as Tsêng Kuo-fan is morally. Assuming the indifference of both of these men to the government to which they profess alliance, the questions arise, whether under any circumstances the authorities at Peking would be weak enough to array themselves against them, and secondly, whether the exercise of arbitrary power on the part of the central government would not in all probability be the signal for a carefully organised revolt. There can be no doubt that were Nanking made the capital of a Southern Empire formed in accordance with the requirements of the times and not based on the obsolete principles which support the China of the present day, foreign nations, already penetrated with the idea that the Empire is too cumbrous, would offer no active resistance to a reactionary movement. If indeed, the struggle were fought out without external aid on either side the result would be beyond question. The worn out government of Peking could offer little resistance to the vigorous action which would be taken. Its best generals, such as they are, would cluster round the standard raised by either Tsêng Kuo-fan or Li Hung-chang, knowing that with them would lie every chance of success.

Nor are these ideas far-fetched. Few, the Chinese themselves least of all, possess any confidence in the loyalty of the mandarins. Powerlessness keeps the majority of them in their proper places, and gives a kind of guarantee for their fidelity. But when accident or any other cause has thrown a power almost co-extensive with that of the Imperial government into the hands of one or two individuals, it is then time to look anxiously for results. The force which could be brought into the field by Li Hung-chang would, by its superiority in discipline, decide the day against any of the raw levies which the Government could bring together, while the name of Tsêng Kuo-fan would be sufficient to preserve the promoters of a new revolution from any serious opposition. Year by year the tenure by which the present ruling family hold the reins of power becomes weaker and weaker. Indeed for the past twenty years the gradual introduction of European ideas has been gradually undermining the ancient systems, but the provincial army called into being by the rebellion in the province of Kiangsu, will yet, we imagine, play the most important part in the future of China.

Summary of the Week.

SINCE our last issue no events of importance have occurred in Shanghai, and from the out-ports we are not in receipt of any advices of interest. The weather has become dry and pleasant within the last few days, and summer may now be said to have really set in. We publish in another column the minutes of a meeting of the Shanghai Cricket Club, held on the 1st instant. Great difficulty has hitherto been experienced by the Committee in collecting subscriptions, and the finances of the Club are consequently in anything but a flourishing condition. We are informed that Burgevine was drowned accidentally on his passage by boat from Foochow to Soochow, under the charge of a Chinese escort. From a recent Peking Gazette we learn that Tsêng Kuo-fan has been invested with the absolute control of all military affairs in the provinces of Chili, Shantung and Honan. The mandarins have been directed to render implicit obedience to his mandates.

A HANKOW correspondent informs us that the river has risen to a level with the bund opposite the Custom House at that port. It is said that Chi-chi h-ien and Chên hsien, two towns in the Sze-chuen province, have been entirely washed away by the recent floods.

The M. I. steamer Lebourdonnais arrived in the river on the 31st ultimo, bringing telegrams from London to June 28th.

THE KAN-WANG'S SKETCH OF THE REBELLION.

The wealthy and others in the provinces of Kuangtung and Kuangsi respected the Tienwang exceedingly and gave heed diligently to his sacred instructions; inwardly delighted to meet with a true son of heaven. At Lung-mu temple the Tienwang destroyed some idols and sang the following to himself at the same time:—

Such are by no means gods,
But trifling pretenders to truth.
The son of heaven has come.

To awake mankind to their senses, and during a dream that he had, he recited the following:—

Now that five hundred years have passed
The true sun appears in sight;
And how should these poor glowworms dare
To rival it in light?
On its suspense in heaven's arch
All vapours disappear,
And as it shines demons and imps
Are hidden out of fear.
The North and South, the East and West,
To it their homage pay,
And hosts of the barbarian tribes
Are yielding to its sway.
The stars by its great splendour in
Obscurity are buried;
And solely its pure brilliant rays
Illuminate the world.

It was said that at the temple of K'anwang the god was in the habit of manifesting himself day and night, and that the temple warden was afraid to enter the temple for the purpose of offering up incense. Anyone who dared to question the power of the god was sure to be visited with great affliction, and prayer had to be offered up to avert calamity. A lad was employed by the god to run after the magistrate's chair, and release the magistrate only upon promise of a dragon robe. The Tienwang as soon as he had learnt of this proceeded, in company with the Nanwang, P'êng-yun-san, to Siangchow, and when they reached the temple they discovered that what they had heard about the terror of the idol was correct. The Tienwang, however, knocked the idol down and tore its clothes, reciting the following lines as an accompaniment:—

I rebuke the demon Kan with my pencil's quick decree;
He deserves annihilation and shall no more spared be.
Mother slayer, law transgressor, wilt thou also that deceive?
As thou didst with many people, make them in thy power believe.
Cursed to hell, lightning strike thee; burn and vanish into smoke;
With thy horrid stinking body, dost thou want a dragon cloak?

To the opium-smokers the Tienwang gave vent to his eloquence in the following stanza:—

The opium pipe is like a gun, wherewith you wound yourself,
How many heroes are stretched dying upon their pillows!

He frequently, in his discourses, enlarged upon the creation of the world and the things that are therein, and he tried to induce men to recognize the great care that God exercised over them. "For" said the Tienwang, "mankind without the light of the sun, moon and stars, and without the fire of the five elements, though he may have the support of a great mountain, is nevertheless without light in his eyes. Heaven it is that furnishes the light, man himself cannot produce it. The breath of the mortal cannot for a moment be prevented from coming into contact with the circumambient air, and death would assuredly ensue if the breath were to be stopped for a single moment. The food that is daily consumed, the gift of sound imparted to man and the soul with which he is endowed all proceed from God, and he it is whom we cannot dispense with for a single second. How is it that man will not become himself alive to this reality, how is it that he will deceive heaven and not acknowledge the source of all his existence; but on the contrary take unto himself the credit for everything? How is it possible that man should consent to be deluded by gods and demons to such an extent as this? Even the sages of old, although possessed of merit and virtue, not only regarded Shangti in a proper light, but sought to imitate his example. How then is it that mankind should pretend to be disciples of Yao, of Shun, of Confucius and of Mencius, and yet not take a lesson in virtue from them?" The Tienwang was constantly discoursing upon such topics as Theology, Physical Science and Anthropology; his object being to arouse men from their lethargy. The people seeing that he was able to expel demons and drive away evil spirits, exclaimed that he was the most extraordinary man upon earth, and as soon as this rumour spread abroad many followers came to him. He had, moreover, the power of causing the dumb to speak, and when people who were afflicted with leprosy and itch, were cured by reason of the faith that they had in him, a still greater number were induced to be enrolled amongst his followers.

In the years 1813, 1814, 1818 and 1819 he visited Kuangsi in company with the Nan-wang, and everywhere found himself supported. In the year 1850 it happened that a certain rich Hakka named Wên was guilty of persecuting some of the natives of the place, and the magistrate of Kuei-sien allowed the people to redress themselves; the bands of robbers under Chang-chia-sing,* Ta-lyn and others were just then committing their depredations; but the worshippers would not allow them to give assistance. They kept strictly to themselves and any who were disobedient were expelled at once. One body of the robbers was dispersed by the Imperialists, and the other surrendered to us; but fearing that the Tienwang would not give his sanction, they were struck in their observance of our rules and dared in no way refuse obedience.

The Tienwang now took the trouble to marshal the people of Pupai, Kuei-sien and the surrounding places into battalions, and appoint military commanders such as generals of division, colonels and other officers over them. He likewise separated males from females and did not even allow husbands to have converse with their wives; the result was that victory attended the worshippers in all their operations. The Tung, Nan, Si, Pei and Yi wangs had the supreme direction of military affairs and to them was entrusted the programme of military operations. Li-k'ai-fang, Li-k'ai-ming, Lin-fung-sing, Lo-ta-kang, Ch'ên-ch'êng-yung and Ch'in-jih-kuang were appointed to divisional commands, and thus at this time everything was very propitious, and presaged future success.

Unto the Tung-wang was given the power of reading the past or reading retrospective events, and of prophecying regarding future events. He was moreover able to redeem man from sickness. It happened at one time that he became deaf and dumb for a period of two months. Every one had given him up thinking his case was hopeless, but to the surprise of all he suddenly recovered one day, a sufficient verification of the power to redeem from sickness ascribed to him.

The Hsiwang, under divine inspiration, had the power of victory given to him, and whenever therefore any success was obtained, it was due entirely to the power confided in the Hsiwang.

SHANGHAI CRICKET CLUB.

MINUTES of a Meeting of the Shanghai Cricket Club, held at the Main Guard, on Tuesday, August 1st, 1865.

PRESENT.

Committee.

F. A. GROOM, Esq., Honry. Secretary.
HENRY DENT, Esq., Honry. Treasurer.
J. B. MANSON, Esq.,
C. LUCAS, Esq.,
K. MACDONNELL, Esq.

Messrs. Fisher, Merry, Wilson, Milne, Gilfillan, Maitland, Turnbull, Fryer, Ramsay, St. Croix, Jamieson.

Mr. Fisher having been requested to take the Chair the Honry. Secretary read over the Circular calling the meeting, and also the Minutes of the Meeting held on the 6th February, which were duly approved.

The following gentlemen were elected members of the Club:—

H. Ramsay, Esq. and F. H. Bell, Esq., proposed by F. Groom, Esq., seconded by J. A. Maitland, Esq.

J. P. Tate, Esq., proposed by C. Lucas, Esq., and seconded by J. Gilfillan Esq.

The Chairman then proposed that before commencing the business of the meeting the opinion of the members present should be taken as to the advisability of continuing the Cricket Club, there being a considerable debit balance against the Club owing chiefly to the large number of unpaid subscriptions, entrance fees, &c., amounting in all to Tls. 1,128.95. He then requested the Honry. Secretary to read out the statement of Assets and Liabilities, from which it appeared that the liabilities of the S. C. C. amount to some Tls. 2,219.80, whilst their assets nominally amount to Tls. 2,049.10. Of this sum, however, by far the largest item is one of Tls. 1,128.95, unpaid subscriptions concerning which the Honry. Secretary begged to make the following statement:—On receiving the accounts from the Honry. Treasurer he at once set to work to collect all outstanding subscriptions, and after first sending out the Subscription List at least a dozen times, then having recourse to printed debit notes and lastly to private chits, he succeeded in collecting Tls. 645.15. Eleven of the gentlemen whose names appeared in the Club books as owing together Tls. 386.50 for entrance fees, &c., &c., refused to pay on the ground of their not having agreed to become members,—thus leaving an uncollected balance of Tls. 741.45 of which a considerable portion is due by members who have left Shanghai. At present (not taking into account the uncollected subscriptions) the Club owes about Tls. 483 and has to meet expenses estimated at Tls. 50 per month, or say Tls. 400 to the end of the current season, besides remitting the equivalent of some £120 a £130, say Tls 416, for two Marquees ordered from England. The expenses for the past three months have been heavier than usual on account of the Club's having had to pay the coolie hire for rolling and mowing the ground, an item which has previously been defrayed by the Recreation Fund.

Mr. Dent here stated that the Recreation Fund could not be expected to pay the current expenses for keeping up the Cricket Ground, which ought clearly to be defrayed from the annual subscriptions. The expenses had, it appeared, up to this date been paid from that fund, but until the ground had been enlarged and rendered entirely adapted to cricketing purposes, some show of reason might be assigned for the continuance of payment of coolies to roll and keep in order the ground. In his opinion, however, the expenses alluded to ought to be refunded. The Recreation Fund Committee would doubtless pay for the Roller, the Shed lately erected and the Marquees ordered from home. He then went on to say that the original list of Members had been drawn out in a loose manner, gentlemen's names having been entered on the presumption that they were fond of Cricket. Ultimately when lists had been sent round repeatedly, sub-scriptions were collected with difficulty, and many refused payment on the plea that they did not consider themselves members. He would propose that a proper list of Members be drawn out and that all Members shall in future sign a copy of the Rules of the Club before being admitted to the privilege of Member-ship.

Mr. Merry seconded the proposition, and it was carried nem. con.

A member of the Club having asked whether a portion of the Recreation Fund could not be set apart to pay off the debt of the S. C. C., Mr. Dent stated that the who's of the money was in the Shanghai Club, for which the Club had to pay interest. This money would probably be available shortly, as a gentleman had promised to take an additional mortgage on the Club, when certain trust funds fell in. As he said before, he could not conceive why the current expenses of the Club should not be paid out of the subscriptions; if they could not, the subscriptions should be increased.

The Chairman agreed with Mr. Dent as regarded the payment of current expenses from the annual subscriptions.

Mr. Groom thought, however, this was rather unfair. The Fund had been derived solely from the sale of the old Cricket Ground; if necessary a portion of it should be devoted to Cricket. He wished to know in whose hands the management of the Fund, which amounts to some Tls. 32,000, was vested.

Mr. Dent replied that he believed he was the only member of the original Committee at present in Shanghai. Messrs. Whittall, Cunningham, Howell, Campbell and himself were the original members. He was not aware whether these gentlemen had appointed any others to act for them. Before the ground was sold several of the shareholders in the old Recreation Ground wished to receive the profit arising from the sale of the ground. He had received more than one letter containing this request. With a view to prevent this he, conjointly with Mr. Cunningham, drew up a circular to be signed by all the shareholders. In this circular the disposition of the funds was left to the committee above named who pledged themselves to apply the proceeds, less the original value of shares returned to shareholders, for the purchase of a new and larger Recreation Ground and for other public purposes, should the amount exceed the cost of the new ground. No mention was ever made that the proceeds would be applied to supporting the members of the Cricket Club. It must not be forgotten that the members of the Cricket Club have nothing whatever to do with the Recreation fund. The circular in question had been signed by the original shareholders or their attorneys, he believed, in all but two cases; these gentlemen at the time were absent from Shanghai. The original deed declared the old Recreation Ground inalienable, unless sold by the unanimous consent of the shareholders. At the time this motion was passed several of the shareholders were not present, and dissentient voices ruled amongst those who were. He had taken advice as regards this original motion being binding.

The Honry. Secretary stated that if the Recreation Fund paid for the Roller, Marquees, &c., the liability of the Club would at once be reduced to some Tls. 300, an amount which certainly ought to be collected without difficulty. He then read a letter from Mr. Dent resigning the treasurer-ship of the S.C.C., and stating that the Club owed him Tls. 345.39, and requesting that the accounts of the Club might be laid before the Meeting for approval.

The Meeting having accepted Mr. Dent's re-signation proceeded to elect an honorary treasurer, but no gentleman present being willing to accept the office, the Chairman, Mr. Fisher, kindly offered to act as Treasurer pro. tem., and to endeavour to collect in person the various unpaid subscriptions, rendering a statement of the affairs of the Club to a meeting to be called in about six weeks time, at which meeting it shall be decided whether the Club can be continued. This offer was unanimously accepted, and it was decided that the accounts presented by Mr. Dent should stand over until a permanent treasurer be elected.

H. Ramsay, Esq. was then unanimously elected as a member of the Committee in place of R. C. Antrobus, Esq.

After some discussion as to the best means of preventing gentlemen who are not members from playing on the ground and partaking of refreshments unless invited by a member, it was decided that the Committee at once draw up a set of By-laws and take what steps they may deem necessary for the due protection of the interests of the Club.

The Honorary Secretary then read a letter from the Shanghai Zwarenkrian Cricket Club, asking permission to play on the S. C. C. ground. After some discussion it was proposed by the Honorary Secretary and seconded by Mr. Ramsay.

That the permission of the Club be at once granted to the S.Z.C.C. to play on the S.C.C. ground, on condition that they pay a portion of the expense incurred in keeping it in order, such sum to be settled by the Committee. It of course being understood that members of the S. Z. C. C. do not play upon that portion of the ground set apart for matches, and that they conform generally to the by-laws of the S.C.C.

Carried unanimously.

The Meeting having passed a vote of thanks to the Chairman, adjourned sine die.

THE LOSS OF THE FOHKIEN.

To the Editor of the
NORTH-CHINA HERALD.

SIR,—It is with much regret that we feel obliged to come claim of any part of the proceedings of the Naval Court of Enquiry into the loss of the S S Fohkien; and it is only in justification of the course which we have pursued that we deem it right to bring the matter to the notice of the public.

It will be remembered that the enquiry took place upon the requisition of the Captain of the Fohkien, and those who were present at the reading of the finding in open court will recollect that it was as follows, viz:—

Finding.—We are of opinion that the Fohkien was lost through the master and mates mistaking the Westernmost island of Fisherman's group for Video,—a mistake which we consider must not to have occurred had the course and distance been attended to, the Westernmost island of Fisherman's group being only twelve, and Video eighteen miles from the position of the ship when the last sight of Kiusan was obtained. At the same time we feel bound to add, that we consider Captain Johnson deserving of censure for not checking his speed when the log set in, as in such a neighbourhood it could not be safe under any circumstances to steam thirteen knots in such weather.

We also feel bound to note our surprise at the fact of the owners of the Fohkien not having any officer on board with a certificate of competency or service, and at the Hongkong authorities permitting a British vessel to continually leave that port without such certificated officer.

The last clause of the finding was not only entirely uncalled for,—inasmuch as neither the owners of the steamer nor the Authorities of Hongkong were before the Court—but was simply the expression of an opinion which happens to be ill-founded, and for the following reason:—

1st.—Captain Johnson is a certificated master, which fact appeared in evidence before the Court, and is in their published report of the proceedings.

2nd.—The supposed necessity that masters of British vessels trading from one port to another in the East should possess certificates in accordance with the British Merchant Shipping Act, does not exist; and any expression of surprise (particularly the part directed at the Hongkong Authorities) becomes under such circumstances simply officious.

In support of the last reason we have only to refer to the following extract from a letter from the Board of Trade in England, dated the 18th December, 1864, in reply to a communication from the Hongkong Government, and published at Hongkong on the 7th March, 1864:—

Lastly, I am to point out that the Imperial act requiring the production of Certificates, applies only to vessels entering or leaving ports in the United Kingdom, and that consequently there is nothing in the act to prevent a vessel clearing from one port in the East to another, with a master who does not possess a certificate.

The errors and inconsistencies of the last paragraph of the finding, as above shewn, were promptly brought to the notice of the members of the Court of Enquiry, and the first step on their part was to agree to the expediency of not publishing the finding on the following day, in order to give time for investigation.

After reading the letter from which the above extract is quoted, as published in the Hongkong Government Gazette of the 12th March, 1864, they informed us that they had decided and agreed to strike out the clause under notice from the finding altogether; and the proof of such decision on their part is to be found in the finding as published in the Recorder newspaper of the 27th July last, where it will be seen the clause referred to was entirely omitted.

It came to our knowledge yesterday, in an indirect manner, that notwithstanding the statements made to us, it was the intention of the Court to send the whole of the finding, as it originally stood, by the Singapore mail, to the Board of Trade in London; and this too, without officially advising us in any way that their previous assurances to us would not be adhered to.

No time was lost in seeing the President and other members of the Court on the subject, and the information, to our great surprise, was found to be correct. They moreover declined to point out in what respect the reasons for striking out the clause, which they had previously admitted be convincing, were defective.

To prevent misconception, we have thought right to publish the statement of the facts of the case.—And remain,

Sir,
Your obedient servants,
GEORGE TYSON, President.

SHANGHAI RECREATION GROUND.

To the Editor of the
NORTH-CHINA HERALD.

SIR,—I have before me a receipt for thy shares in the above scheme, dated December 1861; it turned up unexpectedly as I was sorting some old papers and nuts. The sight of it has given rise to my reflections and has revived some memories. Nay more, it has filled me with a desire to know what has been done by the trustees appointed in 1861 to watch over and foster the scheme of the "Recreation Ground"

I have made several enquiries but have been unable to gather much information. That a very large sum of money, the profit on sale of the old Recreation Ground, must have been for some years in the hands of the Trustees or the Treasurer, is well know. But as to the disposal of this money, how, when, where; as to the present position of the account, and indeed even as to the name of the gentleman who administer or shall administer this important trust I can gain no distinct information

Can you, Sir, enlighten me on these points, viz:—Who are the Trustees? Who is the Treasurer? Has there been recently, or indeed at all, a general meeting of shareholders, and have any accounts been presented to them?

In short, does any one know anything about the "Shanghai Recreation Ground," its position and its prospects?

Your obedient servant,
A SHAREHOLDER.

Shanghai, 2nd August, 1865.

(We are equally in the dark, but we presume A Shareholder's letter will elicit the desired information from some one of the gentlemen in question.—Ed. N. C. H.)

THE NEW ORDER IN COUNCIL.
(Times.)

The Church of Rome undertakes to exercise a special superintendence over the disciples of her own faith in partibus infidelium; and even Mr. JOHN STUART MILL, in his popular Essay upon Liberty, excepts "barbarians" from the general right of free thought, and word, and will. The exception might seem to be detrimental to the general argument, since it would leave to Mr. MILL, or to the dogmatist who for the moment might stand in his shoes, the power of determining who are barbarians, and consequently who are persons entitled to liberty. But, in truth, this question, who is a barbarian? is a real, practical, everyday difficulty. When English subjects go abroad among civilized nations we surrender them to the protection and restraint of the laws of those nations, and if they happen to be hanged secundum legem loci, we take no thought about it. But if they go among "barbarians," where it may happen that they are scalped, impaled, or cut to pieces upon crosses for no crime known to Christendom, then we consider it necessary to follow the Roman Briton all through the barbarian territory with the protection of British law, and also to restrain him by the terror of civilized punishments. This is both in theory and in practice a matter of great difficulty. In the first place, we have no right, according to the ordinary law of nations, to claim any special exemption for an Englishman from the laws of the natives with whom he voluntarily dwells, among whom he voluntarily dwells, among whom he has perhaps intruded him self; and secondly, we have very imperfect means of following the occasionally eccentric course of those of our countrymen who do go among barbarians, and, indeed, we are very likely not to see their offences, and not to be in a position to punish their crimes. Our law has dealt with this subject in a vague and tentative manner. It does not declare that Queen VICTORIA shall have jurisdiction to set up Courts and punish offences in the Empire of China, or the territory of Abyssinia, or in the Empire of Turkey, for we have no more right to claim such a jurisdiction, except so far as we have extorted it by treaty, than we have to claim it in France or Spain. But our British Parliaments, like ancient Popes, have given our QUEEN a quasi right of conquest over all barbarians. Parliament has enacted that "it shall be lawful for HER MAJESTY to "hold, exercise, and enjoy any power or juris-"diction which HER MAJESTY has or may have "in any country or place out of HER MAJESTY'S "dominions, in as ample a manner as if HER "MAJESTY had acquired such power by the cession or conquest of territory." For the purpose, therefore, of exercising judicial authority over her own subjects in China and Japan Queen VICTORIA is by our law in precisely the same position as if she had conquered those two Empires.

This explanation may, perhaps, be necessary to some persons before they are able to comprehend the purpose of a very long and closely printed Order in Council, recently published. By this Order the Queen of England establishes a Supreme Court, with a Judge, an Assistant-Judge, and a Law Secretary, in a suburb of the Emperor of China's city of Shanghai, and also establishes a series of Provincial Courts throughout the two Empires of China and Japan. Queen VICTORIA is, in fact, doing in the Empires of China and Japan, and in a judicial way, precisely what the PIPE and Cardinal WOLSEY did some time since in an ecclesiastical way in this benighted land of England. We, who are an excitable people, were very angry and called it Papal Aggression; the Chinese, who are not an excitable people, are a remarkably practical people, are not likely to be at all angry. Neither step was perhaps very complimentary, either to us as heretics, or the Chinese as barbarians; but as our Supreme Court obtains the power to try capital offences, the possible spectacle of a man hanged by a Court of English jurisdiction within a dependency upon the Imperial city of Shanghai will be a more startling exercise of foreign jurisdiction than any which was likely to be offered by an Archbishop of Westminster. We have noted, by an instance familiar to ourselves, this exercise of English prerogative in two foreign States in order that our readers may more easily comprehend its very exceptional nature, and by no means for any purpose of unfavourable criticism. It is a measure which has become absolutely necessary for the preservation of peace and for the protection of our own good name in China and Japan. It is what we have been ourselves urging forward upon every recurring occasion of some unpunished outrage committed by an European upon Chinese victims. Henceforward we may hope that there will be some real protection for the native Chinese against the predatory violence of the European adventurers who make marauding incursions into the country, and even against the more respectable European traveller who fires off his slotted guns to frighten the market-boat out of his way. Henceforward every Consular Court is to be a Provincial Court armed with power to try civil cases up to a moderate amount, and to take cognizance of misdemeanours, and punish, with or without assessors or juryman, to the extent of 12 months' imprisonment. In addition to this, as we read the Order, every Provincial Court may, in case of a grave offence coming before it, be rendered for the occasion a branch of the Supreme Court—the Judge or Assistant-Judge attempting to preside at the trial. If we are right in this interpretation it is a very important alteration of the old system; for if it had been necessary to try every grave offence at Shanghai, a murder at Nagasaki would have been as unpunishable under the law as it was under the old system. We fear, however, that the Order in Council has been somewhat loosely drawn in this respect, and that the absolute right of a re-hearing before the Judge of the Supreme Court after any decision by the Assistant-Judge, may tend to create complications under which great criminals may still escape punishment. It is satisfactory to know, however, that so far as British subjects are concerned, a written code has now been put forth by which the Chinese and Japanese authorities may appeal when crimes they are not allowed to punish are committed. Crimes which are capital in England are capital also before the Supreme Court of Shanghai, and other crimes and offences which have their punishment here, are to be punished with a like punishment there—subject, of course, to the royal prerogative of mercy, and in cases of death to a confirmation by the Crown, acting by its Ministers resident in the country.

There are, however, certain special offences introduced into the jurisdiction of the Supreme and provincial British Courts of China and Japan which do not obtain in England, but are especially required by the circumstances of those countries. The punishments affixed to these offences cannot be too soon known to the persons whom they are likely to concern. Acts of individuals, which have been most fruitful in contentions and little hostilities, and even great wars in the Chinese and Japanese seas, have been outrages on person or property; contraventions, commonly with violence, of the Customs' regulations of the Chinese; foreign trade at forbidden ports in Japan and insults offered to the ceremonies and religion of the people. Outrages on persons and property are now sufficiently provided for. Contraventions of Customs' regulations are still left unpunished, and it is an omission in the new scheme that the Provincial Court is not directed to protect the Chinese officers of Customs in the execution of their duty. The framers of this Order seem determined, however, to avoid future disputes with Japan, since they give power to punish with two years' imprisonment and 10,000 dollars' fine, and seizure of his vessel, any British subject attempting to force trade with Japan at other than the treaty ports. Another very important provision enables the Minister resident in China to frame regulations for the government of British subjects in China and imposes fine and three months' imprisonment as the penalty of disobedience. This is the most doubtful part of the Order. It is true that these regulations are supposed to be referred home to receive the assent of the Secretary of State; but as there is an exception in cases of exigency there is reason to fear that the power will afford too wide a scope for the too active meddling of diplomacy, and bring us periodical crops of mercantile grievances from the East. Some such power is undoubtedly necessary to exist but it will be contrary to all experience if in this form it be found to work well. A much more certainly expedient provision is that which denounces against any British subject who shall take service either with or against the Emperor of China, two years' imprisonment, 5,000 dollars' fine, and perpetual deportation. One other special enactment requires to be noted. It is that which ordains that any British subject publicly deriding, mocking, or insulting any religious ceremony, service, or feast in China or Japan, shall be liable to summary sentence, by imprisonment with or without hard labour for any period not exceeding two years It is a useful and a necessary threat; but it is strange that perpetual deportation, which would be a remedy as well as a punishment, is in this case omitted.

Upon the whole, this very comprehensive scheme of judicature has been well drawn up, and the powers and qualifications subject to comprehends have been treated with much ability. We have indicated some particulars in which we think it might be improved, and in which it will be found faulty in working. The great necessity however is that it should be supplemented by some arrangement for combined action among the Treaty Powers. The immediate effect of the promulgation of this Order at Shanghai will be that the "rowdies" of the East will declare themselves Americans, or Portuguese, or Germans according to circumstances, but will always declare, notwithstanding the registry, that they are not British subjects. The new Order is an important step; but to render the subject certain and the remedy complete we must go further. If one Treaty Power can erect this complete judicial hierarchy in the territories of independent States, all others may do so. Is it not possible for all the Treaty Powers to combine to have one Supreme Court and one set of provincial Courts, whereof there may be different Judges, if they please, and different laws administered to different suitors, according to their nationalities, but whereof the jurisdiction as a Court might be universal over all foreigners claiming exemption from Chinese and Japanese tribunals? This Court would spread a net large enough to catch all the European vagabonds, but now, while each nation makes its separate cast, the worst fish of prey escape between the little independent nets. No doubt, however, there are difficulties in the way of such an arrangement as this. We can only hope that some general scheme may ultimately be perfected and meanwhile thank our very Government for the step now taken to clear our national conscience before the face of our barbarian allies.

FOURTH REPORT ON JAPANESE CURRENCY.

(Confidential.)
TREASURY CHAMBERS,
December 2nd, 1863.

MY LORDS,—I have the honour to forward to your Lordships by way of illustration of my former Reports, two Memoranda which have been communicated to me by Mr. Winchester, Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa, in Japan.

Mr. Winchester's interesting account of the manner in which the trade between the Japanese and the Dutch was carried on before the recent Treaties, and his explanations regarding the produce of the precious metals in Japan, and the different action of the Tycoon and the Daimios in the regulation of the coinage, tend to throw much light on the perplexing question of the condition of the currency of the country. I am unable, however, to give entire assent to the arguments by which he illustrates the manner in which particular coins obtain "the position of a favoured currency," in a state or in course state of society. It is not, in my opinion, that the native trader fixes the value of the one current coin used in his operations; but that his preference for that coin occasions a peculiar demand for it, which gives it a factitious value. The value at which Mexican dollars pass current in China is not regulated by any fixed and arbitrary rule adopted in that country, but by the price at which they can be obtained in the London market. That price is governed by the ordinary laws of supply and demand; and the demand has, of late years, so much exceeded the supply that dollars command a price which, compared with bar silver, is much higher than that which is due to their intrinsic contents of precious metal. The high value borne by the Carolus dollar was in like manner due to its scarcity.

Coined money generally bears, even when the Mint is free, some value exceeding its intrinsic value. "The natural value of coin, as compared with bullion, will be enhanced by a Mint charge, or by any circumstances which may limit the supply for circulation. Much that is anomalous in the currency of the East may be accounted for by attention to this very simple principle; and I dwell upon it here because it affects in some important respects Mr. Winchester's otherwise very clear deductions from the facts which he communicates.

I agree with him in the opinion that the very artificial regulations by which the current value of the silver coinage of Japan was maintained at an abnormal rate, as compared with the gold coinage, cannot long exist by the side of a general intercourse with the rest of the world; but the present condition of the currency of the country shows that the natural operations of commerce would hardly have effected a complete change within the short period of one year. The great convulsion referred to was caused by the forced action under Article 10 of the Treaty, which conferred the right of exchanging coin weight for weight during the first year of its operation, and it cannot be truly said that the injury occasioned by that provision of the Treaty was inevitable.

With these qualifications I see little to dissent from in Mr. Winchester's Reports, and it is satisfactory to me to find that, groping as I have been by an uncertain light, I have arrived at practically the same conclusions with a gentleman who has so much information on the intricate subject of the currency of Japan, and has treated it with so much impartiality and intelligence.

I have only to add that the observations of Mr. Winchester on the subject of the exchange granted to Foreign Services, in so far as they apply to the accommodation afforded to ships of war, open a new view of the subject, and are entitled to consideration.

I have, &c.
(Signed) G. ARBUTHNOT.

MEMORANDUM BY CONSUL WINCHESTER.

The currency difficulty has been more or less continuously felt since the opening of Japan to foreign trade. That it is in the main traceable to the internal arrangements of Japanese administration, and not to any special design against foreign trade, is the inference deduced from a patient consideration of all the facts and statements which have come within the cognizance of the writer.

It must be taken as an admitted fact that the relative value of the precious metals in this country was, during its long seclusion, dependent on a condition of affairs entirely different from that which determined their value elsewhere in lands fully opened to the world-circle of commerce. The foreign trade permitted with the Dutch was one of yearly barter. Money was not even passed for the balance, which was carried on to the transactions of the following year. The old Dutch trade, therefore, had in it no element tending to assimilate to ordinary rates the values of the precious metals in Japan.

It was found shortly after the new Treaties came into operation, that in the interior transactions of the Japanese life, gold was only five or six times more valuable than silver. Such an extraordinary ratio gave rise to the most frantic efforts of foreign traders to effect purchases of gold. And but for the action taken by the Japanese Government, viz. their resolution to accept in the payment of taxes gold as an equivalent for silver at the usual rates, Japan would have been entirely drained of the former metal. The truth is, that in Japan the comparative values were regulated exclusively by the internal supply and expenditure of the metals, and the internal wants of the country; they were never exported, and there was a much greater supply than was required for the currency of a population on the whole of a feudal rather than a mercantile disposition. The yield of gold was large in proportion to that of silver; when the proportion of the yield of the precious metals required for the annual wear and tear of the circulation was subtracted, the surplus had only the prospective value attachable to its future chance of being required for currency. Hence there must have always been a great premium in favour of silver as compared with the gold with bullion. Hence, also, the relatively high value of silver coins as compared with gold, inasmuch as the greater number of small than large transactions incidental to human society require silver rather than gold.

The Japanese from their long seclusion were as little able to deal practically with the precious metals according to our standard, as the Indians of Hispaniola were in the time of Columbus.

In a rude or incomplete state of society the premium of a favoured currency is always greater than in countries where the commercial element is highly developed. It is to a large extent only a question of fashion; per contra whether his money is in coin, bank notes, exchequer bills, bullion, silver or gold,—as are more or less interconvertible; but to a trader in Central Asia the one coin current in the bazaar of his operations is essential. The silkworm-grower in Che-keang established 25 per cent as the premium on the Carolus dollar; in truth they valued not the fact, but a mere variety of coinage, in other words a favourite die, at 25 per cent. It is, I believe, the operation of a similar consideration which maintains the high premium of itzebus in Japan.

Under what conditions can the Japanese Government buy silver for the purpose of coining? It is a fact, which mercantile inquiries fully acknowledge, that for 233 itzebus a weight of pure silver equal to the weight of 300 itzebus can be purchased; but the Japanese custom from 7 to 10 per cent. of alloy, which may be fairly set against the expense of coinage. The fact, therefore, is that in Japan native coinage imparts an additional value of one-third to silver. The property of being current is worth 33½ per cent.

Foreign coin, i. e. dollars, cannot be considered in Japan generally as having any other character than that of bullion. Therefore when the dollar is worth 2.30 it is nearly at the same value as native bullion. At 2.40 to 2.50, which rate has been sometimes attained, it is above par as compared with native silver. The local circulation of the dollar in the ports of trade caught on the whole to maintain the dollar slightly in advance of the native bullion. When, therefore, dollars are exchangeable at 2.30 to 2.40, they may be fairly considered at par, to have the value as bullion fairly determinable by the conditions of trade and Government existing in Japan. But some persons are unwilling to see the matter in this light, though it is practically admitted that at the above rate of exchange business is found, ceteris paribus, to be both safe and easy. Their argument runs in this way, 100 dollars are equal in weight to 211 itzebus; allowing 5 per cent. for seigneurage, why should not the Government give us 206 itzebus for 100 dollars? But can any unprejudiced mind fail to see that if such a regulation were to be compulsory on the Japanese Government, it would amount to a forced sale of foreign bullion at 30 per cent. more than bullion can be purchased from their own subjects.

Any attempt to enforce such a proposal would be resisted by the Japanese as intolerable. The results of the return to cash payments in 1819 by the Bank of England would be trifling in comparison with the derangement of all existing transactions which the sudden derangement in the value of bullion would produce.

At the present moment the value of dollars is, however, much less than the par referred to. At Nagasaki the dollar is worth 2.03; at Yokohama, 2.15; at Hakodadi, 2.25. The latter port is in an entirely exceptional state. The presence of a considerable Russian squadron necessitates a large issue of itzebus by the Government, which is absorbed by no commercial drain for produce from the interior. But in the other two ports, where the trade is considerable, and larger in exports than imports, money, i. e. native coin, is constantly seeking the interior in exchange for the produce brought to the port.

It appears, therefore, that the natural development of the export as compared with the import trade during the past year has mainly led to the fall in the value of the dollar. Other causes have also contributed to this end. Kawaiko, Mitsuiyand other rich merchants in Osaka are understood to have operated with a view to maintaining the depression. If so, their transactions would have very considerable influence.

In Nagasaki a large import of base coin, which the extensive connections of the Chinese Guild enabled them to throw into circulation, created and has kept up a local distrust in the soundness of foreign coin; while the lightness of some of the Mexican dollar issues—particularly by the dollars with three spots ("mitz bots"), tending naturally to preference for the heavier kinds—has impaired the general value of the coin.

It is suggested that difficulties connected with the want of uniformity in the issue of Mexican dollars might be got rid of by their being paid and received, as in China, according to a fixed weight, viz., that in all cases 100 dollars should be represented by the weight of 7 ounce, 1 cundareen, 7 cash. The only objection to such a course is, that it would tend to impress still more on the dollar the character of bullion, and limit its circulation as a coin, in the ports, to market and other petty transactions.

On the whole, the inclination of opinion in the mind of the writer is against any artificial settlement of the Currency question. Everything should be done by the foreign Ministers to induce the Japanese Government to favour the free circulation and currency of the dollar in the ports, and it should be carefully protected from base issues. That done, we must trust to time and the extension of commerce to do the rest, and gradually lessen the coinage necessary. The battle of exclusion is still being fought in Japan. If the non-intercourse party is allowed to assume the ascendant, trade and exchange will become daily more difficult and troublesome; but if the determination to draw Japan into the great family of nations is steadily persevered in by foreign Powers, the monetary errors and delusions of Japanese finance will rapidly yield to the necessities of an active and continually extending commerce.

Unfortunately there is much in the present state of foreign relations with Japan on which the exclusive party are building sanguine hopes of seeing the working of, or even eliminating, the new leaven so visibly affecting all classes of this interesting population.

EXTRACT FROM MR. CONSUL WINCHESTER'S DISPATCH OF FEBRUARY 18, 1863.

In former despatches I have had occasion to write at considerable length in reference to the currency difficulties of the Japan, the necessary funds for the purchase of the excess of exports over imports have been partly supplied by the purchase of foreign vessels and partly by the import of dollars from Shanghai, with which port alone there is a rule of exchange. The average rate during the year has been from 2 to 4 per cent. discount for drafts at ten days' sight.

The exchange between dollars and Japanese coin has formed a subject of more or less complaint throughout the year. Its fluctuations have been from 225 to 200 itzebos per 100 dollars, the average being about 208 itzebos per 100 dollars. I forbear to enter in detail as to the cause which have combined this low rate, and content myself with noting them in the briefest manner.

1.—The excess of exports over imports.

2.—An importation by the Chinese guild of base dollars.

3.—A fanciful rejection of certain issues of the Mexican Mints.

4.—An insufficient supply of Japanese currency.

To the obviation of the influences from the second and third causes my exertions have been constantly directed since my arrival here. The fourth arises from the operations of the Japanese Mint being unequal to supply the currency required by the transactions of the connections of increased by foreign trade. I believe that if the Japanese Government could be only persuaded to give an increased activity to their coinage operations, most of the currency difficulties and irregularities would entirely disappear with the increasing supply of the circulating medium. I by no means concur in the extravagant notions of the profit which, by some inexplicable legerdemain, the Japanese Government are supposed to derive from the currency, nor in the estimate of its detrimental action on commerce. Much of the apparent loss to foreign trade is compensated by the impulse confessedly given to the import trade; and if the seigneurage on the Japanese Mint issues is unnaturally large, it must be remembered that the coin returns to the Government in the shape of taxes without any depreciation in its receipt as an equivalent of either produce or bullion. The inequalities are the natural results, in a country new to general commercial operations, of a preference for native currency of which there is an inadequate supply, and will ultimately rectify themselves by the necessities springing out of continued commercial intercourse with the world. The fact that the Japanese Government have recently made overtures to a foreign firm for the import of gold bullion, may serve as a confirmation of the belief that no mysterious control is now exercised over the values of the precious metals.
